FROM A LATE LONDON PAPER.

Received at the office of the Commercial Advertiser.

LORD CASTLEREAGH.—The following, which may be relied upon as an absolute fact, may throw some light upon the popularity of Lord Castlereagh, amongst the lower classes of his countrymen.

The old Corry Packet, in a recent passage from this port to Newry, had on board a fine Arabian horse, belonging to his Lordship, which some of our readers might have lately seen in this port. A most violent storm arose; and it was with difficulty that the captain and crew prevented the passengers from throwing the poor animal overboard; as they persisted in attributing their danger to having any thing belonging to that popular Nobleman on board.

African Ordeal.—The report of the select Committee of the House of Commons, on the state of British forts on the western coast of Africa, contains the following account of the mode of trial, for the offences among the natives.

"Trial proceeds, for the most part upon evidence, but in particular cases the ordeal or doom is resorted to. Doom is a poisonous-bark, & is thus administered with great ceremony.

The accused person, or a proxy, is stripped quite naked, and seated on the ground, in a public place; a certain quantity is given, which he or she must eat; immediately after a large calabash of water is placed before the person, who drinks as much as the stomach will contain, when vomiting consequently takes place. If the doom is thrown up, the person is considered innocent; if it remains on the stomach, it is an indication of guilt; the latter seldom occurs, however, there have been some instances which have proved fatal. The idea of doom strikes such a terror in the minds of the native, that I am of opinion very few submit to the trial who are not perfectly innocent."

An extraordinary fact.
A large mushroom was found on the 8th inst. growing in the middle of a fire place, in the blacksmith's shop of Mr. Banning, of Collingwood, Du-ris, Wilts. It measured ten inches long in the stalk, and 5 1 2 inches in diameter, it was proved by the root of the plant, that it had grown there since eight o'clock, the preceding evening, at which time Mr. B. left work.

We have had occasion to speak of the breakwater at Plymouth, and do not think that the present will be the last time.

It is most remarkable, that the Amphitrite frigate, she terd by that well devised work, even in its present almost incipient state, was enabled to ride out the last terrible gales of wind with ease, having only one anchor down, and a dozen might have derived the same advantages of shelter and preservation during the same awful tempest. This breakwater is, perhaps, the only work of great national use and importance that has been undertaken in this country in modern times. It was begun upon the enlarged plan of affording protection to 40 sail of the line, to be there kept in readiness, from whence they might reach Brest at any time in 12 hours after the wind had come round to the eastward, and enable a French fleet to sail from thence, so that in fact, when finished, it will constitute a kind of secure blockade on Brest harbour itself. Now is the time therefore, for urging with the utmost zeal, this transcendently useful operation, when such abundance of hands, wants employment, and labour will be procured comparatively cheap. Greatly will ministers endeavor themselves to the British navy by seizing so happy an opportunity of completing an undertaking, which next to the value of its hands, must form its most effectual bulwark. The utility of the whole work may be justly appreciated, when it is known that if the part of the breakwater which is already finished had not been there, not all the anchors in the ship could have saved the Amphitrite and her crew from destruction.

Truro, (Eng.) Jan. 24.

Before the publication of our next, the Grand Council of the nation will have assembled; and we shall probably be enabled in our paper of the ensuing week, to minister some food to that appetite of enquiry, which is now whetted to its keenest edge, on those momentous concerns in which we are interested.

At present, while we share the general eagerness for information, we confess that we are not without a sanguine hope that the assembling of the Legislative Body will be, as it were, the signal for the departure of many of the evils that oppress us. The nature of those evils is too well known to need particular comment; their effects are too serious not to require instant alleviation. Retrenchment and economy must begin in earnest; and be carried into every department of the public service. Of this truth we believe every individual in the country is fully aware; and we expect, therefore to see those measures brought forward by government with a grace which will render them doubly palatable to the people. It is rumored, indeed, that his royal highness the prince regent, who will open the session in person, has prepared a plan for the relief of the national distresses, of a most extensive and able nature. But whether this be correct or no, it is evident that much may be done if government will set manfully about it; and judging from the expression of the general voice, we believe that the present opportunity of improving our condition will not be suffered to pass over without advantage. A repeal of the worse than useless corn bill, and a revision of the poor laws, are amongst the most permanent measures which we suppose will fall under the cognizance of parliament.

That the ensuing session will be busy and interesting to a high degree, cannot be doubted; but we are hurt to find that the opposition have resolved to increase the bustle, if not the interest, by moving an amendment to the Address, even before they are acquainted with any part of the speech to which that address will reply: This proceeding shews a disposition to embarrass and retard, rather than to expedite, the re-establishment of prosperity and concord, and therefore we think it deserving of marked disapprobation.

It might here be expected that we should say something of the rumors which are about respecting an application to the sinking fund; the voluntary subscription, or loyalty loan, and other expedients, to which it is said, ministers will have recourse; but we think it unnecessary to do this until the rumor is embodied into a fact. With respect to the sinking fund, however, the integrity of which is considered to be essential to the confidence of the capitalist, it is our decided opinion that the government has not the most distant thought of meddling with it.

Although nothing official has, of course, transpired, respecting the speech which his royal highness the prince regent, will deliver; we observe it is mentioned, in a Sunday paper, that great stress will be laid on the late riots, and that an argument will be thence deduced by ministers for maintaining the military establishment nearly on the present scale. But we conceive this apprehension is very poorly grounded. Whilst we are far from agreeing with the paper in question that the riots were perfectly contemptible; and whilst we concur with the Lord Mayor, in doing justice to the coolness and intrepidity displayed by the military on that occasion, we do not at all conceive how any argument can be brought, from that single instance, of the value of a few hundred organized men, to justify the perpetual employment of as many thousands in this country. But the surmises of the paper in question are shown to be wholly erroneous, not only from the declaration of government last session, but from the military reductions which have been going on ever since, and which, we understand, are now to be enforced on a much more extended scale.

In the reduction of the army, then we expect that retrenchment will find an ample field; and in expressing our satisfaction at this prospect, we conceive that we are chargeable with no inconsistency, as a measure may be expedient to day, which was not so twelve months ago. It would be highly improper, however, to suffer the martial spirit of the country to expire, or even to languish, and in order to preserve it in a constitutional way, the training of the militia should be generally and strictly enforced, by which all the national advantages of a standing army would be obtained and the expenses attending it would be in a great measure avoided. It may just be observed, by the way that the reductions which have been already made, are understood to have left above a million of the last year's grant unapplied.

On the whole then, there appears good reason for the nation to look, not only with eagerness, but with lively hope, to the approaching meeting of Parliament, as the sign at least of the termination of its difficulties. It has been too much the practice, with discontented minds, to argue from feeling rather than from reason; and thus to add to the weight of a present and unavoidable burden, by anticipating future and increased suffering. It has been the object of our humble yet arduous efforts, to counteract this propensity, and we flatter ourselves that our labours, have not been altogether in vain. The result however, of the coming Session, must finally demonstrate the truth or error of the conclusion which have been drawn, and to that test we cheerfully submit our case. In the mean time however, it may be observed, that the still improving state of commerce and manufactures, forms no inconsiderable collateral evidence of the justice of the position for which we have uniformly contended: that the distresses of the country were but the natural effect of a rapid transition from a state of extended warfare to universal peace; and that when the general exhaustion induced by the former should begin to wear off, the blessings of the latter would be felt in an increasing grade, and its concomitant advantages.

New-York, April 2.

The editors of the Gazette return their thanks to Dr. Mitchell, for the very interesting communications which follows.

Remarkable domestic Manufactures.

The pieces of goods prepared by the American Tartars, and presented to Dr. Mitchell by Capt Richard Whitley, late of the U. S. army, are full of instruction.

They consist wholly of animal materials, and do not contain a single vegetable thread or filament. They are worked with curious art; and the ability displayed both in the design and in the execution, are admirable. They were received by that distinguished officer, while he held the military command at Michillimackinac, as an offering of friendship on the part of an aged and venerable Chief from the remote regions of the North West; with an intimation at the time, that they were gifts of extraordinary value.

Their Tartar origin is evinced by the fabrics themselves, and by the scenes they intend to represent.

The principal article, is a tawed or soft-dressed skin, probably of the Wapiti Deer, of about three feet square, or of an extent almost sufficient to cover a common breakfast table. The colour is a dark brown. The consistency of the leather pliable and uniform throughout.

One of its sides embroidered with an interesting scene, wherein the hunters are exhibited as returning to the village after a successful chase. The embroidery is performed with flexible slips of Porcupine quills instead of thread. The stitching is so nicely done that the skin is not punctured through in a single instance; the needle, as in skilful tailoring, only passing deep enough in the leather to secure the work. The dyes, especially the blue, yellow and red, surpass every thing that our most able chemists and manufacturers can extract from the vegetables of the forest.

It was probably intended for a mantle or ornamental covering for the shoulders; all gentlemen however, of a classical taste, are reminded by it, of the Shield of Achilles as described by Homer.

In the middle are two quadrupeds, apparently beasts of prey. From their long tails, it may be conjectured they are Cougars, and that the Hunt which is celebrated, is that of the American Panther. They are encompassed by a ring, as if that circumscribed space was allotted for their confinement if alive, or for their deposit if dead.

At the distance of an inch and more from the circle, there is a square of ten inches on each side, denoting the common area, or space assigned for general convenience in the centre of the village.

Opposite the four sides of this square, there are four circles of about four inches diameter, and opposite the four angles of the same four more, representing the habitations of the tribe, constructed around the central area; and, after the manner of the Tartars, the houses or wigwags are circular, and not square. Around these huts or dwellings there are figures of human beings; showing that the inhabitants were briskly stirring about. Within them are forms of lower birds, and various other objects; illustrating in all probability, some matters connected with their furniture, dress and cookery.

The whole village is surrounded by a work of 2 feet square, securing and inclosing it completely. On the outside of it, by way of border, is represented a grand dance. On two of the sides are embordered nine men each, making eight men; and on the opposite two sides five men each, making ten. So that, the dance is performed by twenty eight persons, connected hand to hand, and extending round the whole contour of the margin. This express on of festivity and joy seems to occupy the part of the male inhabitants, that are capable of partaking the adventures of the forest.

This is picture writing, advancing towards the hieroglyphic. It marks an era in society of these people, and it designates with singular exactness the progress of the mind in invention, and of the hand in dexterity.

There is nothing perhaps in the celebrated paintings of Mexico, more worthy of philosophical and historical research than this and other fabrics of the Indians.

The Mexican paintings were executed upon cloth and were symbolical. The assimbolo embroidery is done upon leather, and is native. The former is derived from the Austrorians; the latter from the Hyperboreans. The more cultivated states who people the southern parts of America, formed the famous record discovered in new Spain. The reader Tartars who migrated to the Northern regions of the same Continent are the authors of the fabrics, no less curious, but in a totally different style, now under consideration.

American Antiquaries have an extensive and fertile field to cultivate, and it is pleasing to find so many new talents occupied in the products of labour.

Philadelphia, March 31.

Gen. WILKINSON'S MEMOIRS.

We have hastily glanced over this voluminous work, and particularly that part of it which may be termed original—for a large proportion of the volume is made up of documents which have already been before the public. Upon the whole, however, it must be deemed a work of no common value; and to the future historian will prove an important guide and auxiliary. The general writes, as he no doubt would fight, with great force and bitterness. The following extract from his introduction, is the general's miniature likeness of Mr. Madison:

"The freedom with which I have treated president Madison, may be imputed rather to disappointed ambition and personal resentment, than a sense of political obligation; and I confess the magnitude and notoriety of the wrongs I have received from him, and by his authority, furnish strong grounds for this suspicion: yet if that faithful monitor which speaks within, has not deceived me, I may conscientiously deny the imputations; for if I have on the severest scrutiny of my heart, discovered any resentment to the man, I declare it to be of that kind of evanescent pain which leaves no sting behind. Personally, I from my heart acknowledge myself obliged to him, because his precautions have taught me humility, and his attempt to wound my pride and to impoverish my old age, has furnished me leisure to turn my thoughts to duties too often neglected, and as far as may be allowed to frail man, to prepare himself for that awful moment which is to determine my fate for ever. Not I disclaim personal resentment; but I will acknowledge that I most ardently detest the vices of the man, and although the exposition of his character and conduct was indispensable to the vindication of my own, and our common country, I should acknowledge an additional motive, in a sense of duty to my country, and the most solemn conviction that he writes in his character the tyrannical disposition and cold hypocrisy of Tiberius, without either his energy or partial respect for justice; that he has professed principles in which he had no faith, to affect popular delusion for the accomplishment of his ambitious views. I consider him an enemy to the constitution which he professed to admire and swore to support, treating his oath with disregard, and his early professions with indifference. I verily believe he has laid the foundation of monied aristocracy in these states, and fostered a spirit of official speculation, which tends to subvert the principle and spirit of the government; and that he is desirous to give force and effect to those measures by the undue extension of executive influence and the increase of a standing army."

The former is derived from the Austroriparian; the latter from the Hyperborean. The more cultivated Malays, who people the southern parts of America, formed the famous records discovered in new Spain. The ruler Tatars who migrated to the Northern regions of the same continent are the authors of the fabrics, needless to say, but in a to ally different style, now under consideration.

American Antiquaries have an extensive and fertile field to cultivate, and it is pleasing to find so many men of talents occupied in the productive labor.

Jon. Hargrove, Reg. C. B.

The following very interesting article, is taken from the Christian Observer, of September, 1816 —

"Messrs. Wright and Son, surgeons of Bristol, have succeeded in restoring the faculty of hearing to several persons born totally deaf and dumb. These persons having now acquired the possession of distinguishing sounds, are daily improving in the power of conversing. These gentlemen intend to receive a limited number of persons of respectability, laboring under these infirmities, into an establishment into the neighborhood of that healthy situation, Clifton."

An important discovery has been recently made in the literary world, by the Abbe Mai, who has found in the Ambrosian Library, a work entitled, Epitome Dionysii Halicarnassensis, which contains the books of Livy that have heretofore been supposed to be lost.

A writer in the Boston Patriot, (a democratic paper of the highest quality) on the importance of supporting manufactures, among many other reasons, gives one in their favor which we believe is entirely new. Endeavoring to get rid of a common objection to large manufacturing establishments—they have a tendency to corrupt morals—he says:

"But admit that manufactories would not be so moral as other parts of the community, would it not be a less evil than we now have from importations? What a multitude of sailors and other irregular persons does this commerce nourish? Are not our seaports now more vicious than our manufactories would be? We should then, even in morals, be gainers by the exchange."

Now we had adopted the idea, that since the party to which this writer belongs, had become converts to the utility and importance of a navy, they at least affected to consider sailors as a useful and honorable class of men, and that commerce, little as we have left of it, was of importance to raise up men for the purpose of the navy, whenever their services might be required. It seems, however, that we were mistaken, such is their inherent dislike to trade and navy both, that they are desirous of encountering the depravity of the manufactory, if it be only to get rid of the greater depravity of the vessel. We suppose, then, the principle is, that sailors are too wicked for every thing but fighting. This being the case, we hope not to see the navy, or the plain, honest, frank and gallant sailors, sneered at hereafter in democratic toasts, especially in the Boston Patriot, as an honor to the country."

Interesting Anecdote of Handel's Messiah.
When Handel's Messiah was first performed in England, the audience were exceedingly struck and affected by the Music in general; but when that part of the Hallelujah Chorus struck up, "For the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth," they were so transported, that they altogether forgot the King, who happened to be present, started up, and remained standing till the Chorus ended; & hence it became the fashion in England for the audience to stand while that part of the Music is performing. Some days after the first exhibition of the same inimitable Oratorio, Mr. Handel came to pay his respects to Lord Kinnoul, with whom he was particularly acquainted. His lordship, as was natural, paid him some compliments on the noble entertainment he had lately given the town. "My Lord," said Handel, "I should be sorry if I only entertained them. I wish to make them better." These facts I had from Lord Kinnoul himself. They do great honor to Handel, to Music, and to the English nation.

Extract of a letter from St. Bernard, Dec. 23, 1816.
It is with grief I inform you that on the 16th a frightful avalanche has swallowed up two domestics of the hospital and four men of the town of St. Petre, without there being a possibility of rendering them any assistance. Four of them had set out from the hospital with letters. Two others went to meet them from the town and all disappeared, receiving no news from them, we set out in great anxiety in search of them.—Night surprised us in the gorges of the mountain, and it was with the greatest difficulty we could find one another. The weather was so tempestuous that we passed one another without knowing it. On the 19th and 20th we made fruitless search, and on the 22d, we found three of their bodies, seven feet under the snow, a quarter of a league from the convent. All the families of the unfortunate men are in despair and in tears.

To increase our misfortunes, all our dogs are buried under the snow. There is no longer at the convent a single one of those courageous animals who have been for so long a time the hope of the traveller. The useful race is extinct.

For eight hours the wind has been heaping up the snow, the avalanches have changed the form of the mountain. It would no longer be recognizable. All the inhabitants of St. Peter, able to labor, are on the mountain.

Distressing Occurrence.
On Wednesday morning immediately after breakfast, Mr. Weise, (who keeps a store in Market street) his wife, and the remainder of his family eight in number, were all seized with violent vomitings, in consequence of the supposed villainy of a servant who is believed to have put poison into the coffee. An infant child has already died under the operation; it however gives us infinite pleasure to state, that the rest of the family, though deeply afflicted, are entirely out of danger. The servant, a black fellow, has been committed for trial.

TO THE PUBLIC.
The Monthly Visitor, having now been in the hands of the public for a considerable season, must have given those who have been in the habit of reading it, an opportunity of forming a pretty correct estimate of its real value. Its object is instruction, combined with innocent amusement. And to effect this, while important, religious topics, are freely discussed, interesting anecdotes are never excluded. Many fugitive pieces, some of them of real interest and value, by being inserted here, are rescued from oblivion; and while it delights, specially, in religious intelligence, it is enriched, occasionally, with poetical pieces, and obituary notices.

The continuance of this work, is now depending, entirely, on increased encouragement. Unless the town be at the expense of publication, its future visits must be discontinued. The Editor is ready, and stands pledged to do his part, and hopes that the public will not be backward in doing theirs.

A person will in the course of a few days wait upon the citizens of Alexandria, Washington and Georgetown, for the purpose of soliciting their aid in the prosecution of the work, when it is not doubted the liberality of the religious part of the community, at least, will so far manifest itself as to prevent the disagreeable necessity of discontinuing the publication.

I have lately learned that the following reports, respecting my School and Boarding House, are in circulation, viz. That the Boarders are sent to the Pump for water—that the joints of our floors are open, which has given the young Ladies chubblains—that those who parents do not belong to the Presbyterian Church, are, nevertheless, obliged to go with me to the Presbyterian place of worship; and finally, that Boarders and Scholars are leaving me.

In justice to myself, I am constrained to say, that these reports are utterly without foundation in truth. My family is as healthy, in proportion to its number, as any in Leesburg, and healthier than some. I do not object to a young lady's attending a different church from mine, provided her parents wish it, when she can have a suitable female companion to accompany her: without this, I am in duty bound to keep her under my own protection.

Such reports must have been sent abroad, either by those entirely ignorant of my establishment, or by some evil and designing persons; who wish to injure the reputation of my Boarding House and School.

I return my thanks to the public for the liberal patronage which I have received; and have the pleasure of informing them, that my school has never been more prosperous than at present; and that in June I expect to remove to a large building well adapted for Boarding and Teaching, erected for the purpose, in one of the most healthy, pleasant and retired situations in town.

Forty Dollars Reward.
Ran away on or about the 25th of December last, from the subscriber, living in Middleburg, Loudoun county, Va. a black man named Daniel, or Daniel Fisher, (formerly belonging to the estate of Thomas Nelson, dec'd) about 38 years of age, 5 feet 10 or 11 inches high, stout made, speaks slow and full, and has a large scar on one of his feet occasioned by a cut. He had on and took with him a blue coat and pantaloons, fur red hat, and shoes and other clothes not particularly known. He was hired in Waterford during the last year and understood had liberty to hire himself about. He is a very good hand in a brick yard and is tolerable good shoemaker. It is probable he has engaged himself in one of the above trades. He mentioned when he left Waterford that he should go to Harper's Ferry and commence boatting, having obtained my leave to do so. Whilst at Waterford he lived in the house of a free negro, and it is highly probable he has procured a pass from some of them, to suit his purpose. He has a mother living in the neighborhood of the Little Falls, belonging to the Dulaney estate. The above reward will be given to any person who will deliver him to me, or secure him in any jail so that I get him again.
